Additional information

Cwtsh continued to recover from the ravages of COVID which had had a profound effect on the willingness of supporters to attend events and classes.

However monthly events continued in particular the first Friday presentations by Eminem's local authors historians and businesses. Also, the monthly open mic events in the Murenger Pub in Newport continued with presentations by local poets and authors.

Following closure of children's library removing the wheeled bookcase and rebranding by removing the front window logo decal. This to open up the windows space and allow paintings and other items to be exhibited in the windows space.

The remaining library books were donated to Clytha school and Books for Africa.

There was the possibility of resuming creative writing classes. A new provider was found and creative writing classes resumed in May.

There were several successful first Friday talks such as the one in February regarding the Newport Naval Mutiny of 1921 and on May the 6th with Kit Lambert who has written scripts for a number of popular tv series including Eastenders and Father Brown.

There was a regular program of art and photography exhibitions such as the one in April relating to paintings of local scenes by local artist Justin Brown. The exhibition proved to be very popular and the artist sold several paintings.

With May came the great news that local brewery Tiny Rebel had kindly agreed to sponsor the first Friday presentations at Cwtsh which helped greatly in providing expenses for speakers who sometimes had to come long distances.

Also, in May a longstanding committee member Leighton Long died at the age of 86. The committee agreed to install a small plaque as a lasting tribute to Leighton's contribution to the success of Cwtsh.

In June it was felt that the constitution of Cwtsh was out of date and should be updated in several respects. It was noted that this would need to be carried out and approved at the next AGM, probably in November.

In August Cwtsh supported a Windrush Festival in Bellevue Park, Newport with speakers, music, a plasma screen and refreshments.

In September Justin Brown who had had a very successful exhibition at Cwtsh started an art class which appeared popular.

Amendments to the constitution were drafted and agreed at a special meeting of trustees And the amendments were approved at the AGM in November.

Regular contributions of artwork produced by local schoolchildren were exhibited in the window gallery at Cwtsh.

November saw the annual Newport "Art on the Hill" exhibition for which Cwtsh acted as a hub location where participants could have their attendance cards marked. There was also an essay competition for children the prize for which was a book donated by a well known children's author, creative writing and poetry readings.

The fixed price contract for electricity supply ended in November and the new contract would involve considerably more expenditure it was clear that Cwtsh would have to be more careful with its electricity usage.

The committee set up a special subgroup to look into inception of a membership scheme as it was felt that the Constitution envisaged a full membership more involved with Cwtsh.
