THIS was much cheaper than the Laser and Draper disc testers, yet more accurate. Its instructions were very good, covering heat, skin and eye protection, and the toxic danger posed to children. They also emphasised disposing of coolant with the household waste, not putting it down the drain. The readings in Celsius and Fahrenheit were printed on the tube and related to how many of the six discs floated. All readings were around four degrees low, except the OAT 33 per cent, which were four degrees too high.
