Individual Differences

By the time you read this I will pG be climbing Kilimanjaro, the highest free standing mountain in the world. I'm climbing with a group in aid of the charity GIFT and looking forward to sharing my experience with you when I get back. I'm very grateful that there will be a medic, guides and lots of locals climbing with us who not only carry our tents, food etc. but also help keep our spirits up. (Cheeky side note: I'll know if you have read this D'var Torah if you ask me about my climb).

In this week's Parsha, Korach rebels against the authority of Moshe and Aharon. 'The entire community is holy, and G-d is within them. Why do you exalt yourselves above the community of G'd?' (במדבר טז:ג)

Where did Korach go wrong? After all he was seeking equality and unity, which seems like an idealistic and powerful ideal. Moshe's response to Korach was 'In the morning, the Lord will make known who is His, and who is holy...' (במדבר טז:ה) What was special about the morning? Moshe's message is that G-d created the world with diversity, He separated light and dark, He created day and night. Everything and everyone has its own unique spiritual and physical energy, its own unique purpose. Moshe tells Korach, if you can undo the separation between day and night, then you can undo the boundary between Aharon and the rest of the Jewish nation.

Korach's mistake was thinking that we are all the same, when in reality diversity is inherent to creation. There are millions of species of plants, fish, birds, no two people are alike, there are differences between nations and cultures, even between body and soul. Why did G-d create the world in this way? Because the deepest unity is to be found within diversity, it allows people to give to each other, we need teachers and we need students. Boundaries and distinctions exist to create harmony, for example, we need fire and we need water but these can only work together if there is a boundary (a pot!). If we deny our differences, we deprive each other of what each of us can give the other. Moreover, if we are all the same, unity is no achievement. Korach wanted us all to be Cohanim, however our mission is to use our unique identity to fulfil our own purpose, rather than trying to be someone else.

The truest unity is achieved when all the distinct parts of creation complement each other. Each of us represents a unique note, and together we create a symphony, not by all playing the same note, but by fulfilling our own unique role and contributing to the bigger unified picture. We achieve unity within diversity by respecting our differences, sharing our contributions and learning from the unique experiences and perspectives of others. Our differences need not divide us, they actually complete us. Our role as humans is not to deny distinctions, but rather to foster respect, unity, and love within the inherent diversity.

This message really resonates with me, which is why I wanted to share it with you. I am so grateful for the diverse group of people I have learned from and continue to learn from on a daily basis. I am also extremely grateful for the opportunity to experience the culture in Tanzania and for the diverse group of people I will be climbing Kilimanjaro with. I definitely wouldn't want to be doing this without their support and expertise! While I will be spending Shabbat on the mountain and sleeping in a tent, I will be thinking of you all at Kinloss and wish you all a peaceful and restful Shabbat!
