The Silence of Aharon – Rabbi Josh Harris

I recently read an incredibly emotional interview with Jen Airley, whose 21-year-old son Binyamin HY”D fell in battle in Gaza on November 18th. Jen has been a source of inspiration for Am Yisrael since her son was killed, speaking with extraordinary strength and faith. I found one part of her interview particularly inspiring. Speaking about the moment she was informed by IDF soldiers of her son’s tragic death, she recounts, “As soon as I left my room and saw the soldiers at the staircase, I knew what that meant. I understood the phrase: “Vayidom Aharon, And Aharon was silent,” when he learned the death of his sons. There was nothing to say other than “Baruch Dayan HaEmet (Blessed is the True Judge)” [the blessing recited after receiving bad tidings, especially news of a person’s passing].

Jen was of course referring to the reaction of Ahron in this week’s Parsha after receiving the news of his sons’ deaths. Silence. The Gemara in Berachot 6b tells us that the reward of attending a house of mourning is for the silence. Not the words of comfort or the beautiful stories told of the deceased, but the silence. What is the power of silence in such a situation?

The Mishna in Avot (3:13), quoting Rabbi Akiva, says: “The transmitted Oral Torah is a protective fence around the Torah; tithes are protective fence for wealth; vows are a protective fence for abstinence; a protective fence for wisdom is silence.” The language of the Mishna appears to be inconsistent. The last clause does not take the same form as the other clauses. We would expect the Mishna to end by saying, “Silence is a protective fence for wisdom.” Why is the order reversed for this final clause?

Midrash Shmuel, a 16th century commentator from Safed, explains that Rabbi Akiva was emphasising the unique quality of silence in regard to wisdom. With the other clauses in the Mishna, alternative fences besides the ones mentioned might be entertained. For example, wealth may be gained through other means than by giving tithes. Wisdom, however, is preserved solely by the vigilance of silence.

Wisdom is an all-encompassing term. What is the specific type of wisdom being referred to that can only be acquired through silence? Surely, the conventional understanding of wisdom as knowledge of Torah is acquired through participating in the lively conversation and debate of the Beit Midrash. The Gemara in Tamid 32a asks, “Who is truly worthy of being called wise? One who sees with foresight.” For a person to have the wisdom to be able to look at the world and perceive the Divine plan, silence is a requirement. Silence is the greatest depth of requirement for a person to have the ability to say “Baruch Dayan HaEmet”, to bless the bad just as he blesses the good. Silence is the power to understand the holistic and complex nature of Hashem’s plan. Often, we are so busy talking and involving ourselves in the matters at hand that we forget to take a step back and take everything in - the past, present, and future – in any meaningful way.

The silence of a house of mourning allows the mourner to mirror the reaction of Aharon. Silence. It’s no easy fete, especially in light of a tragedy. That’s why Jen Airley’s response to her son’s tragic death – a moment of silence followed by reciting “Baruch Dayan HaEmet” – was the most incredible and inspiring display of strength and faith in Hashem. Baruch Dayan HaEmet, Blessed is the True Judge – while way may not be able to explain and understand why this happened, we have tremendous faith in Hashem that it’s all part of the Divine plan.

“We cry every day for him – when we see a new picture of him, when we hear something that he accomplished – but we have made a conscious decision not to ask “Lama, why?”, but “Lema, for what? What can we do now?” – Jen Airley
