Stepping Back – Leora and Harry Salter

Parashat Tazria speaks about the concept of Tzaraat. This is loosely translated as leprosy, a spiritual disease with physical manifestations of blemishes on a person's skin. This disease would present itself in many ways, with different stages to it as well. It says in Chapter 12, Verse 3, that if it is Tzaraat, then 'the Kohen shall look at it and declare him contaminated.'

'Tzaraat' was mentioned in the Torah was with the story of Moshe and the Burning Bush when he doubted the Jewish people and when Miriam spoke badly of Moshe for marrying a Cushite woman. In both instances, Tzaraat is described as 'like snow'.

But what brings these two stories together? Why does the Torah specifically mention these two stories when talking about Tzaraat?

These two stories shows that the punishment for spiritual misguidance was Tzaraat. In the story of Moshe, he didn't trust himself and G-d that the Jewish people would believe him. With Miriam, she spiritually went wrong, she spoke badly against Moshe and was punished with Tzaraat.

To atone for the sins afflicted by Tzaraat, one is sent into isolation. Rashi comments that since the sin has caused separation between two people, so too one must be separated. The Gemara in Arachin (16a) teaches the different reasons for the disease of Tzaraat. It mentions, to name a few, sins of bloodshed, false oaths, robbery, and Loshon Hara. All of these sins concerns two or more people. The Torah is teaching us a very important lesson when it comes to Tzaraat.

We do not understand the physiological definition of Tzaraat, it was treated by the Priest, the spiritual leader of the Jews, and not a doctor. Tzaraat goes beyond the physical, it is described as snow, as a blemish, and nothing else. Although it is no longer around, it teaches us that if we choose to speak badly of other people, we must remove ourselves from the situation. We mustn't carry on justifying ourselves for what we did wrong, rather we must recognise what we did wrong in order to recognise how we can do right. The remedy for Tzaraat was to remove oneself from the community, in order to take time away and think about self-improvement.

In last week's Sedra, Moshe and Aaron were having a disagreement about what offerings were to be offered up and what ones can be eaten. At the end of the disagreement, Aaron spoke to Moshe and told him the answer he felt was right. The Torah then describes what Moshe did next. It says: Moshe heard and he approved. Instead of Moshe arguing with Aaron, or attempting to belittle him, Moshe demonstrated a great deal of humility. According to Rashi and the Gemara in Zevachim (101a), Moshe conceded that he had forgotten what the exact law was for that day regarding the offerings.

This shows us the real remedy for Tzaraat. We need to be able to step back, to realise when we have done wrong. No one is perfect, the Torah has a system for imperfections, and it has a way to get back into the community to recover what you have done wrong.
