How close should you sit near a bonfire? – Leora and Harry Salter

The Mishnah in Avot (2:10) speaks about how we should sit close enough to learn from wise people, but not too close to be overfriendly and not too far away to not learn from them. It uses the metaphor of a bonfire, where to properly benefit from the warmth, one needs to sit close enough to feel the heat whilst ensuring they aren't too close that they will get burnt but not too far away that they will not feel the heat.

Parashat Bamidbar consists of many events including a census in which most of the Bnei Yisrael are counted. We also learn important details regarding the infrastructure of the camp of Bnei Yisrael and how the people, as well as the specific groups within the Bnei Yisrael, function together.

The people were divided into four groups, each consisting of 3 tribes that surrounded the Mishkan. Whilst 9 tribes made up the outer perimeter of the Mishkan, Moshe, Aharon and the 3 Levite families – Gershon, Kehat and Merari, formed a layer around the Mishkan. Rashi comments that the positioning of each tribe is significant, for example, the tribes that were nearest to Moshe and Aharon were more likely to be scholarly. Rashi notes that the tribes of Yehuda, Yisachar and Zevulun all became scholars because of their location adjacent to Moshe and Aharon.

This also works in the negative sense too. In a few weeks' time we will read the story of Korach who was from the Levite family of Kehat, who camped adjacent to the tribe of Reuven. Rav Milston, Rosh Midrasha at Midreshet Harova, comments that even though Judaism believes in free choice and individualism in the sense that we all have the availability to choose our actions, we can still be influenced by those we choose to associate ourselves with.

One of the most important decisions that a person can make is the people they want to be associated with and the community they build. We have the right to choose who we want to be friends with and how we build our relationships.

As the Passuk in Proverbs says (12:26): A righteous person gives his friend direction, but the way of the wicked leads astray. Rashi comments that a righteous person is more generous than his neighbour, whilst a wicked person who is accustomed to harming will lead people astray.

In Sefer Bamidbar we see the importance of our associations with fellows. As the Mishnah in Avot says (1:6) Rabbi Yehoshua Ben Parchiah teaches that one must acquire for thyself a friend. We have a responsibility to ensure that we are caring for each other and increasing our interpersonal skills and service to Hashem to influence people in the best way possible.

STUDENTS

All current university students (including those graduating this summer) are being urged to share their experiences of antisemitism this past academic year, as part of a nationwide survey. As a Jewish undergraduate or postgraduate student, your anonymous response is vital for informing key decision makers about the situation on campus and advising where change and support are needed. The survey takes about 10-15 minutes to complete and participants can enter regular £100 gift voucher prize draws.

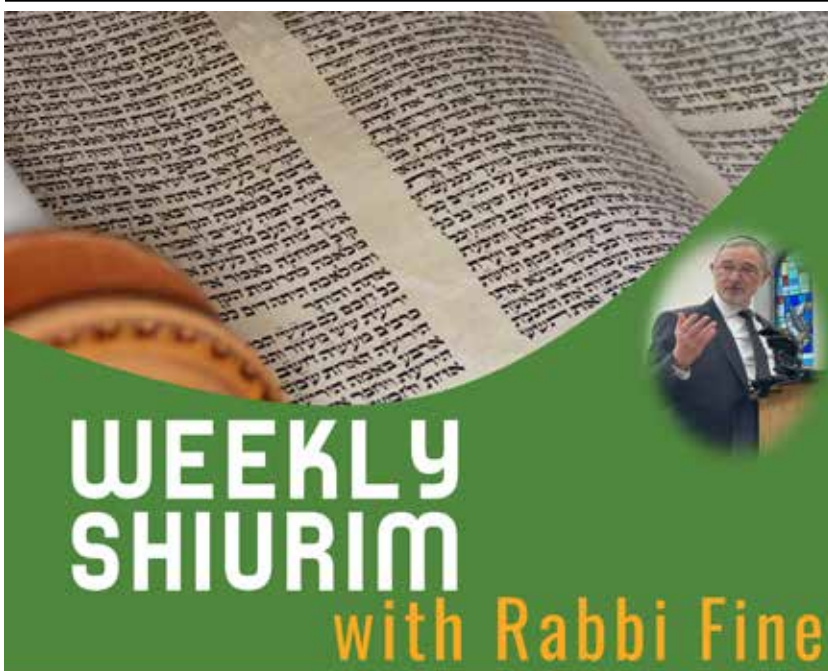

The survey is being carried out by the Intra-Communal Professorial Group (ICPG), in partnership with UJS. The ICPG is a group of 30+ Jewish academics at UK universities, conducting research and working with leaders and policy makers to combat antisemitism and improve the campus environment for Jewish students, academics, and staff.
