It's All In The Design – Rabbi Josh Harris

If you were building a tower that reached the heavens, you'd probably try to cut a few corners and attempt to find the easiest possible method to finish the project as quickly as possible. After all, a tower that reaches the heavens sounds like a very long and arduous task. It's fascinating therefore to read about the building plans of Migdal Bavel (The Tower of Babel) in this week's Parsha. The architects of Migdal Bavel were intent on making their lives difficult: "Come, let us make bricks and fire them thoroughly; so the bricks were to them for stones, and the clay was to them for mortar." The people of that generation were determined to create their own bricks rather than use natural stone as building blocks. Why is there such an emphasis on them making their own bricks, especially when much easier methods were available to them?

The action of making bricks epitomised the nature of that generation. They were only interested in the power of man and did want to utilise anything created by God. Their goal was to remove any hint of Hashem as the Creator and attribute all work to human beings. In fact, when Hashem descends to see the tower, the Torah tells us, "And Hashem descended to see the city and the tower that the man had built". The emphasise was on the strength and creativity of man. Using natural stone to build their tower would have acknowledged God as the Creator and that man's work in this world simply makes use of the natural resources created by God. Instead, they made their own bricks so that no indication of God would be noticeable in the tower.

Rabbi Shalom Rosner, one of my teachers at Yeshivat Kerem B'Yavne, points to a stark contrast found in another structure in Sefer Bereishit which reached the heavens: the ladder in Yaakov's dream, on which he envisioned angels ascending and descending. The ladder connected the heavens to the earth and the material emphasised by the Torah in the verses about the ladder is in fact stone. The word 'אבן', meaning 'stone', appears several times throughout that passage. The Torah describes how Yaakov took stones to use as a pillow and constructed a monument out of stone to serve as a testament to the encounter. Yaakov understood that the foundation to everything is God's natural creations. Our job is to build upon the foundations that God has created for us, always remaining grateful to God and understanding that our ability to build is because of the strength and resources God gives to us.

In an age of human innovations and human creativity, it can be difficult to attribute everything back to Hashem. The episode of Migdal Bavel is a reminder of what happens when we focus solely on the power of man without attributing our achievements and abilities as gifts from Hashem.

LORD DANIEL FINKELSTEIN

BOOK LAUNCH AND 'IN CONVERSATION' | TUESDAY 31 OCTOBER, 8PM

Daniel Finkelstein's family experience at the hands of the two genocidal dictators of the 20th century is one of miraculous survival. This is a story of love and murder. A story of how the great forces of history crashed down in a terrible wave on two happy families; of how it tossed them and turned them, and finally returned what was left to dry land. It's a story of brilliant ingenuity, great bravery, and almost unbelievable coincidences.

Daniel Finkelstein is a British journalist and opinion writer. A former Executive Editor of The Times, he continues to write for the paper. He has been Political Columnist of the Year four times and recently joined the board of Chelsea Football Club. He was appointed to the House of Lords in 2013.
