

Tzav: Establishing the Kedusha of the Mishkan

By Rebbetzen Tali Harris

This week's Parsha, Parshat Tzav continues with the discussion of the Karbanot and the Mishkan. We are told specifically of how Moshe took the anointing oil and anointed the Mishkan and everything which was in it, thereby making it all Kadosh, sanctified for Hashem. The Mishkan, which precedes the Beit Hamikdash as the dwelling place for God in the desert, generally has many similarities to the Beit Hamikdash. However, on this occasion, we see that the sanctification process of the two structures is very different in nature. The Mishnah in Shavuot states that the procedure in the Beit Hamikdash required the participation of the king, a prophet, the urim v'tumim and the 71 members of the Sanhedrin. There is no mention of any anointing oil.

So why is it that these processes differ so much? Why does the Beit Hamikdash have a long list of people involved while with the Mishkan it's just Moshe with the oil?

Rabbi Yosef Dov Soloveitchik, the great 20th century American Torah leader, explains that each of these essential buildings contained a different type of kedusha, holiness. He explains that the Beit Hamikdash had Kedushat Hamakom, meaning that the location where the Beit Hamikdash was erected was sanctified. The physical structure did not itself contain kedusha, rather the kedusha in the Beit Hamikdash was an extension of the kedusha of the geographical location. The Beit Hamikdash stood on the Temple Mount, a place intrinsically sacred. Because of this, there is no need to anoint the structure itself and a delegation of important people come to take part in this process.

In contrast, the Mishkan was a moveable building and therefore it was not the location upon which it was erected each time which contained kedusha rather it was the walls of the building itself. This is called Kedusha Haguf, sanctity of the actual structure.

While both buildings serve similar purposes in that they assist in transmitting kedusha, the kedusha inherent to each is different in nature. The Kedusha of the Beit Hamikdash is not something accessible to us today and for those living outside of Israel, the Kedusha of the land of Israel is not accessible either. Yet, the concept of the Mishkan, a moveable building with anointed walls, is something more familiar to us. It is incumbent on us to follow in the footsteps of Moshe, to imbue the structures where we serve God with sanctity. While Moshe used oil to accomplish this, as modern-day Jews we have the opportunity to uplift our homes, schools and shuls through actions which bring holiness into this world. It is our role to do continue doing this in the hopes that this sanctification will enable the sanctification of the Kedushat Hamakom of the Beit Hamikdash to be accessible to us once more.

responsibility to pay for this is split between the communities that both depend on it and benefit from it.

Kinloss is tasked with raising £7,500 per year towards the total and to achieve this we are looking for donations starting at just £75 per family.
