Nature: The Greatest Miracle Of All – Rabbi Josh Harris

What's the reward for keeping Torah and Mitzvot? We might expect that in return for pursuing a spiritual journey and reaching new heights in our relationship with Hashem, our reward will also be spiritual and will see Hashem perform miracles on our behalf. Rather, the beginning of this week's Parsha details the bounty of blessings we will receive as our reward, all within the bounds of nature, such as rains in their time and abundant yields of fruits. Why are the rewards for keeping Hashem's commandments so physical in nature?

The Meshech Chochmah, the great Eastern European commentator of the early 20th century, explains that miracles do not represent the ideal way that Hashem wishes to run the world. It is the system and rules of nature, created and controlled by Hashem, that contain within it the capacity to provide for all our needs in this world. Our reward for following the Torah is that Hashem will maximise the medium of nature to produce plenty and fulfil all our needs.

This teaches us a profound lesson that the laws of nature are not pre-programmed to produce a set amount based on natural input alone. Hashem created the system and continues to run the system. It's only through Divine supervision that the output of the system is determined. If our spiritual level deserves a higher output, Hashem will reward us with such.

Recognising the hand of Hashem through the strict rules and regularity of nature can be difficult. This is the role that miracles play. Hashem will occasionally perform miracles in order for us to understand who is behind the system of nature. When we experience a dramatic change in the natural laws that govern the world, we can easily understand that the One who manipulates the rules is the One who created the rules and continues to oversee them. The primary goal of the miracles is to restore our awareness of Hashem's involvement through the laws of nature.

This idea is also reflected in the way we praise Hashem for our different interactions with the way He runs the world. The Gemara in Shabbat 118b surprisingly states that a person who says Hallel every day is a blasphemer. This is even more striking when compared to the Gemara in Berachot 4b that praises a person who says Ashrei every day and promises that person a place in the World to Come. If both are acts of praising Hashem, why is one exalted while the other is disapproved?

Based on his above approach, the Meshech Chochma explains that Hallel praises Hashem for open miracles, such as those witnessed in Egypt. Praise for these miracles are certainly appropriate at the right time, but not every day. By reciting Hallel on a daily basis, a person is suggesting that Hashem should only be recognised through His miracles, and not through the miraculous system of nature that He controls every single moment of every day. Ashrei praises Hashem for nature. The two qualities of Ashrei which the Gemara points out are the fact its lines follow the order of the Alef-Bet and it contains the verse “פֹתַח אֶת יָדְךָ וּמַשְׁבִּיעַ לְכָל חַי רְצוֹן” – “You open Your hand and satisfy the desire of every living thing.” The praise of Ashrei is that Hashem constantly sustains us on a daily basis through the regulated laws of nature. If we follow in the path of the Torah, and fulfil its commandments, Hashem will maximise the system of nature, providing for all our needs and allowing us to see the miraculous hand of Hashem within the system of nature which isn't natural at all.
