HOTEL Palace PORTOROŽ

Hotel Palace Portorož, Minor Reserve Collection

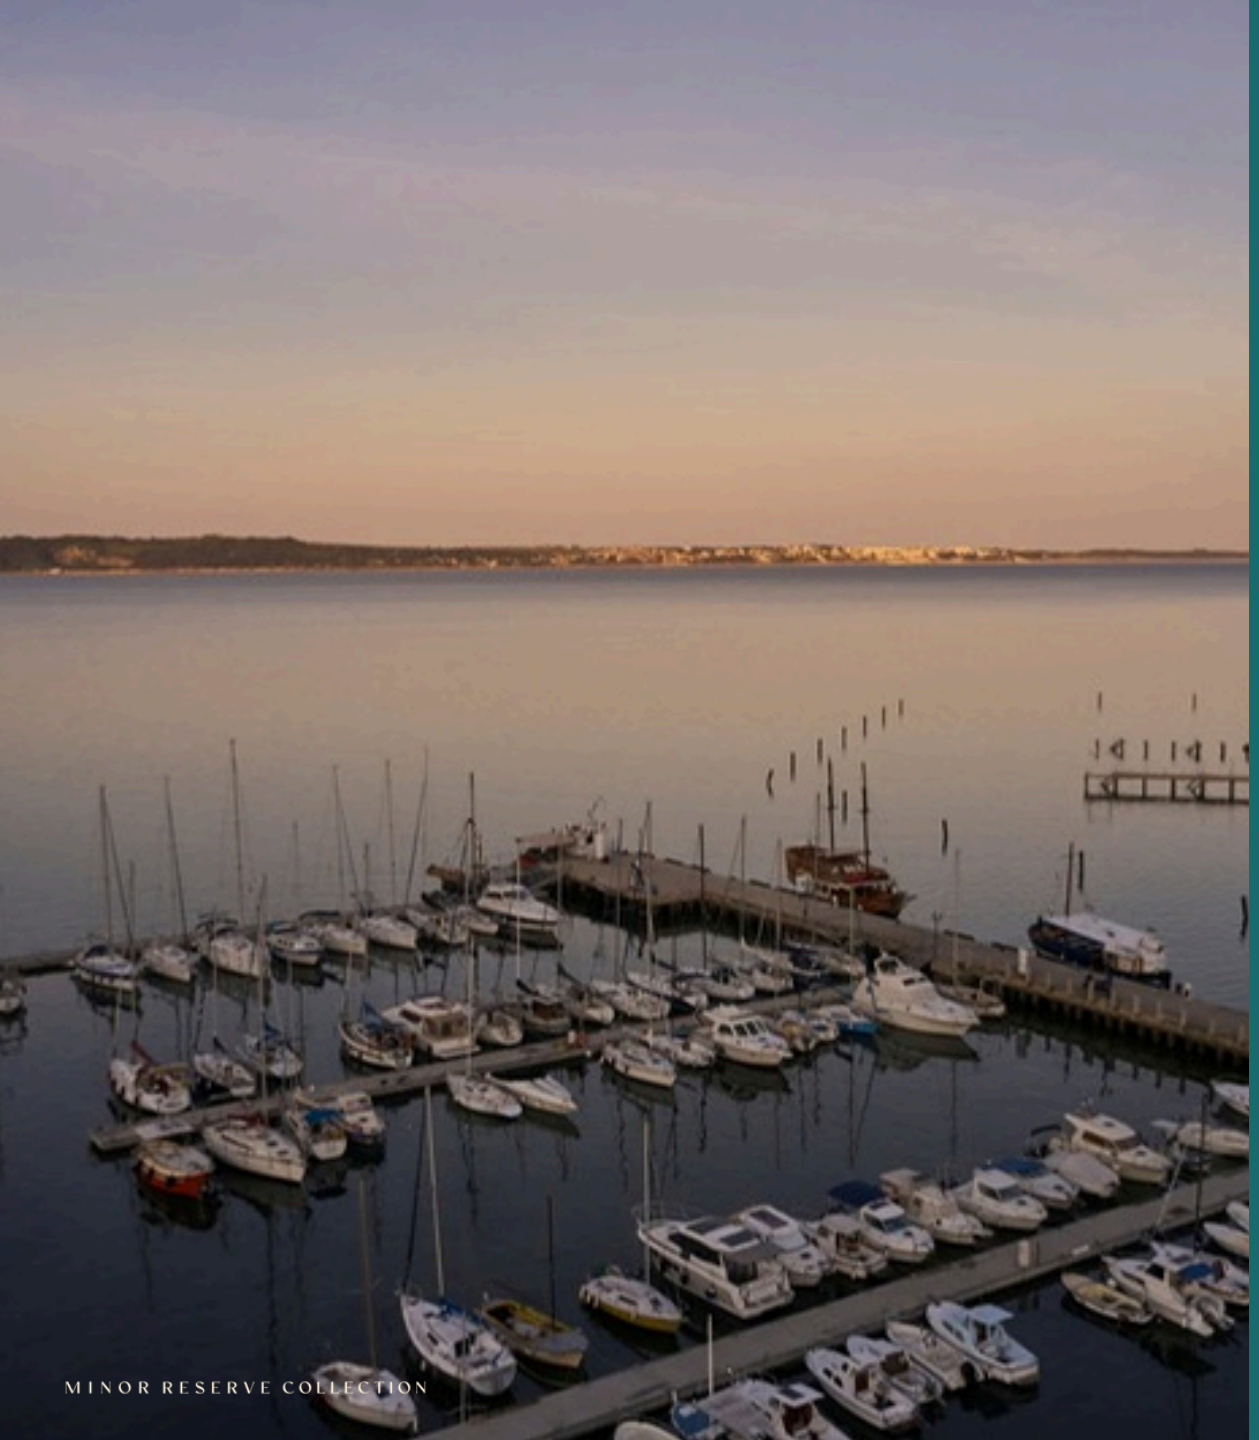

Hotel Palace Portorož enjoys a unique location on the seaside promenade of Portorož, with a fantastic view of the Adriatic Sea. Close to the medieval town of Piran and just a short drive from Trieste, Ljubljana and Venice, the hotel is ideally positioned for guests to explore the region and to take advantage of numerous leisure and incentive opportunities.

Elegantly nestled in a historical park, the luxurious hotel dates back to the Austro-Hungarian Empire in 1910. Behind its grand Habsburg facade, there is a unique blend of traditional and contemporary design.

Location

We sit on the edge of the Adriatic, where Slovenia's coast meets Italy and Croatia within a short drive. Portorož has drawn travellers for its mild climate and seaside air for over a century, and that same setting now makes it an easy, memorable choice for bringing people together from across Europe.

Our location strikes a balance few destinations can offer. Guests can be walking along the promenade or through the old town of Piran within minutes, yet the region's larger cities remain close at hand. Venice is a short trip by car or boat, Trieste and its airport are just half an hour away, and Ljubljana connects the property to the rest of the continent with ease.

Just beyond us, the Sečovlje salt pans stretch across the southern edge of the bay, where salt has been harvested by hand using methods unchanged for over seven hundred years. It's a rare landscape to have so close, and one that gives guests a quiet, working counterpoint to the coastline.

HOTEL Palace PORTOROŽ

History

The Palace Hotel was built during the time of the Austro-Hungarian Empire as a tourist facility of the highest grade, and Portorož was known as the most important European seaside resort and health spa. Dubbed the 'Austrian Riviera' during the era of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, it was the place to see and be seen for royals, aristocrats, politicians, artists and actors.

Upon its opening on 20 August 1910, the Palace Hotel was the largest and most beautiful hotel on the Adriatic Sea.

Today, this is a hotel whose walls are full of stories and interesting historical information. To mention only a few: during both World Wars, the hotel was used by German and Yugoslav soldiers; it was the location of the first Slovenian casino (1964 – 1972); a favourite location for films; the preferred hotel of Josip Broz; Archduke Franz Ferdinand danced in the Crystal Hall; the famous spy Cicero slept in the hotel; and it was and still is the must-visit place for many celebrities.

Architecture & Design

The hotel's design was conceived by the Austrian architect of Italian origin Johannes (Giovanni) Eustacchio, whose idea was to create a colossal building, blending various architectural styles with the elements of the Vienna Secession. This architecture represents one of the trademarks of Hotel Palace Portorož as it remains visible to this day and is carefully preserved, with some areas of the hotel proclaimed cultural monuments (the architecture and the facade) and man-made landscape monuments (the park).

Inspired by Portorož's Belle Époque heritage and the timeless appeal of the Adriatic Riviera, Hotel Palace Portorož is reimagined as The Garden of the Adriatic: a contemporary coastal retreat where architecture, landscape and social life exist in seamless harmony.

Drawing from historic seaside gardens, elegant promenades and the culture of coastal wellbeing, the design creates a sequence of light-filled spaces that encourage gathering, relaxation and discovery. Refined architectural details, natural materials and botanical influences connect the interiors to the surrounding landscape, while contemporary interventions bring a renewed sense of relevance and vitality.

The result is an experience that feels timeless, welcoming and unmistakably rooted in the spirit of Portorož and the Adriatic coast.
