INTRODUCING

THE EW by EDINBURGH WEAVERS BEDDING COLLECTION

At Edinburgh Weavers, we live and breathe pattern. Steeped in heritage and heavily influenced by the natural world, each of our patterns is a labour of love, carefully conceived by our in-house artists and brought to life in high-quality, contemporary textiles for a new generation.

A curation of our finest prints from more than four decades of creativity, we are pleased to introduce our first bedding collection. Carefully handpicked prints have been matched with timeless, luxury finishes and meticulously developed to be a true reflection of our finest fabrics.

FOUNDED 1928

1928

James Morton founded Edinburgh Weavers in the Scottish capital as an experimental branch of Morton Sundour Fabrics. A champion of the Arts & Crafts movement, it was a chance for him to channel his thwarted creativity.

1935

EW's groundbreaking fabrics were now being used by many leading interior designers as well as featuring in notable hotels such as The Savoy, Claridges and The Berkeley.

1953

Alastair's championing of artist-designed textiles inspired EW's continued post-war resurgence. EW featured daring work by artists and sculptors such as William Gear, William Scott, Cesar and Marino Marini. EW fabrics were used throughout in the Churchill College Cambridge, the British Embassy in Washington and even in a range of Vauxhall cars.

1931

James handed the reins of EW, now relocated to Carlisle, to his 21-year-old son Alastair. He proved to be an inspiration and pioneering leader transforming EW, in the words of Nikolaus Pevsner, into a "laboratory for the best modern textile art."

1945

In the optimism that followed the war, Alastair's interest moved towards more organic and botanical forms and these lighter, liberated organic styles are still a signature feature of EW's work to this day. Alastair believed that a beautiful fabric is the equal of a beautiful painting.

1976

Sundour Fabrics merged with Burgess Ledward (another Courtaulds subsidiary) and the operation moved to Burgess's Bolton headquarters, rebranding as Sundour in 1980. In 1983 the Edinburgh Weaver name was resurrected for a specialist unit, headed by Ursula Greenwood, to once again produce textiles for luxury hotels, with its first collection launched in 1986.

2022

Edinburgh Weavers launches EW By Edinburgh Weavers, offering consumers the opportunity to purchase the very best of the company's creative work, including bold new collections, classic patterns and occasionally resurrecting some of the finest prints from the company archives.

1963

Alastair's death at the age of 53 came as a shock to the design world and he was awarded a posthumous award from the Duke of Edinburgh for his championing of the arts within commerce. Without its visionary leader Edinburgh Weavers lost its way and the number of new designs decreased dramatically until in 1970 it stopped producing new collections, effectively ceasing operations.

2002

In 2002 Ursula Greenwood acquired Edinburgh Weavers. During this year the V&A added to their EW collection with the acquisition of the Courtaulds Design Library, including original artwork and pattern books. From its Bolton base Ursula has pioneered the company's return to its original roots and ideals, following in Alastair's footsteps to fuse creativity with a commercial acumen and has once again established Edinburgh Weavers as a leading international supplier of creative textiles for luxury hotels, cruise liners, buildings and interior designers.
